District Militia Stations

The smaller towns have 63 militiamen, while larger towns are divided into "quarter" directorates. In addition, these are usually divided into three or four militia stations for each quarter.

25X1

Distributed throughout the districts with four or more stations to a district. A station is generally composed of ten to twelve militiamen.

Town Militia Stations

- Usually three or four stations for each quarter or small town with sixteen to eighteen militiamen to each station. Less personnel are used where they are not considered necessary.

Each republican directorate has its own training school for militiamen, non-commissioned officers and patrol men.
